The Ohio Association for Food Protection continued to provide an opportunity for students of The Ohio State University to present posters at our Winter Meeting. We truly value the ability to provide the students the chance to attend our meeting and find the arrangement mutually beneficial.

In anticipation of IAFP 2020 in Cleveland, Ohio, the Ohio Association for Food Protection Board decided to hold the 7/17/2019 OAFP Summer Meeting at GOJO industries in Cuyahoga Falls Ohio. We wanted to increase our membership in northeastern Ohio and also drum up excitement for the upcoming IAFP Annual Meeting in 2020. To address these two goals, we invited Roger Cook, Ph.D, who was the Vice President of IAFP to speak, and by means of creative scheduling of OAFP directly in advance of IAFP 2019, Roger was able to join us in Ohio on his way from New Zealand to Louisville, Kentucky. The meeting additionally featured a tour of the GOJO facilities and presentations by several staff of GOJO industries.

The rare opportunity to hear Roger Cook speak, the tour of GoJo, and the general excitement in Ohio about IAFP 2020 helped OAFP to gain 39 new members in 2019, which was a 44% increase from 2018.

After many years of anticipation, Roger Cook was able to attend the Ohio Association for Food Protection Summer Meeting on July 17, 2019 at GOJO Industries in Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio! It was worth the wait! Roger gave us a detailed explanation of the interaction of the New Zealand and U.S. food safety regulations. Roger discussed the processing and meat hygiene systems in place to ensure food safety. He said there is not an E. coli

O157 problem in New Zealand. He showed a comparison of the rearing practices – feedlots versus self-perpetuating grass pastures, and said the “answer is blowing in the wind”...you can go a couple hundred miles downwind from a feedlot, hold an agar plate up, and culture E. coli. In his second presentation, Roger explained how New Zealand companies generate their own food safety program now because people produce food...and if the people making the food don’t understand it, then they will keep making the same mistakes. Roger also talked about IAFFP 2020, which will be only a few miles away in Cleveland.

Jim Arbogast told us science needs to be aligned with commercial interests, and provided a lot of insight about how GOJO has evolved and works to improve public health. Jim explained the hygiene development process to reduce germs and protect skin. He said GOJO is trying to be their absolute leader in their industry for sustainability. Jim also spoke on the law against making viral claims on the label.

A big thank you to GOJO Industries for providing OAFP with meeting space, some great speakers, and a wonderful tour (you really had to have been there – photos were not allowed on the tour). Greg Jensen led us through a manufacturing facility operated by Summit County’s largest family-owned employer. We saw the lines running for different sizes and types of Purell ® - it was mesmerizing to watch the speed they were able to fill all those bottles!

Chip Manuel said he was disappointed when he came to Ohio the Norwalk Elementary School had been torn down. Norovirus may be the perfect human pathogen. Chip presented a humorous and educational discourse on a pathogen that certainly is not. Chip also talked some about the development of a Norovirus vaccine.

We had 36 attendees, including 12 new members.
