On October 12th, 2022, CAFPA held a joint meeting with the D.C Branch of ASM (American Society for Microbiology). This event, entitled "Creep it Real: Microbiology Past, Present and Future" was open to all and was free to attend. The meeting was virtual and held over Zoom. The goal of this meeting was to "Join DC area scientists (professionals and students) for an exciting afternoon of food safety, microbiology and public health". Overall, there were ~120 people in attendance at this meeting. Overall, the diversity of attendees captured members of government, extension, academia and industry as well as students. The agenda for this meeting included three invited presenters who prepared 45 minute talks and six lightning talks by students and early career scientists. Lightning Talks were 3-5 minutes in length and were chosen from submitted abstracts. The full abstracts for the presented lightning talks can be found at the following link (<https://www.washingtondcasm.org/2022fallmeeting>). The three invited speakers included Dr. Steven Diggle from Georgia Institute of Technology, The Microbigals, and Dr. Eric Stevens from the FDA.
